JUVENILE-COURT STATISTICS AND FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS[1]

INTRODUCTION

The present report is the ninth in the series on juvenile-court statistics and the fourth in the series on Federal juvenile offenders.

The Children's Bureau plan for the collection, analysis, and interpretation of juvenile-court statistics was inaugurated in 1926 in order to make available current information concerning the trends in juvenile delinquency. The analysis of data concerning Federal juvenile offenders was initiated by the Children's Bureau in 1932. The publication of statistics on Federal juvenile offenders is a continuation of the cooperation of the Children's Bureau with the Department of Justice in furthering that Department's program for the treatment of Federal juvenile offenders according to juvenile-court principles.

In order to bring the material on juvenile-court statistics to date the data for 1935 and 1936 have been incorporated in one report and the discussion and analysis have been materially condensed. The detailed data on juvenile delinquency rates which have been presented in previous reports on juvenile-court statistics have been omitted in this report because recent population estimates necessary for the computation of rates are not available. The United States Bureau of the Census has not made estimates of population for individual cities since July 1, 1933. In the absence of more recent estimates it has appeared undesirable to use as a base for the juvenile-delinquency rates the 1933 estimates of population.

SOURCE OF INFORMATION AND PLAN OF REPORT

Part I, Juvenile-Court Statistics for the 2-Year Period Ended December 31, 1936, is based on data supplied by courts cooperating with the Children's Bureau in the plan for obtaining uniform statistics of delinquency, dependency and neglect, and other cases of children dealt with by juvenile courts. The analysis presented deals largely with cases of delinquent children.

The data regarding juvenile-court statistics are reported to the Children's Bureau either directly by individual courts or under a State-wide system. A court cooperating individually sends to the Bureau a card for each case disposed of by the court and a card for each case of a child discharged from supervision during the year. These cards are tabulated in the Bureau, and tables showing all the essential facts for the cases are returned to the court. Under the State-wide system the courts furnish to the State welfare department or other State agency concerned with juvenile-court work or probation service, information regarding their cases; the State office consolidates the material and supplies the Children's Bureau with an annual report for each court in the State. Much more detailed information regarding cases is obtainable under the system of reporting by individual courts, as it is possible to make correlations between the items reported; for example, the age of the child and the reason for reference to the court, or the age of the child and the place of care pending hearing. Under the State-wide plan based on summary tables, such correlations are not possible.

Part I includes the following:

The reporting area (pp. 3 to 5).—A brief description of the areas that have reported juvenile-court statistics.

Trends in delinquency cases (pp. 5 to 20).—An analysis of the trend in the number of delinquency cases reported by 28 courts during the 8-year period 1929–36.

Trends in dependency and neglect cases (pp. 20 to 24).—An analysis of the trend in the number of dependency and neglect cases reported by 27 courts during the 8-year period 1929–36.

Summary tables, juvenile-court statistics for 1935 (pp. 25 to 43) and for 1936 (pp. 45 to 62).—Tables based upon the combined figures for the courts that reported in 1935 and 1936. All tables other than numbers 1, 9, 14, 18, 19, 27, 29, and 30 are based upon figures received from courts reporting on the individual-court plan.

Source tables, juvenile-court statistics for 1935 (pp. 63 to 102) and for 1936 (pp. 103 to 139).—Tables giving data for entire States, for individual courts serving areas of 100,000 or more population, and for certain groupings of smaller courts.

Part II, Federal Juvenile Offenders for the Year Ended June 30, 1936, presents information concerning the juveniles under 19 years of age who violated Federal laws and came to the attention of Federal authorities during the period. The statistics presented have been compiled by the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice. These cases are not included in the statistics obtained from juvenile courts, unless Federal jurisdiction is waived and arrangements are made for these juvenile offenders to be dealt with under State law in their home communities.

The analysis in part I of cases dealt with by the juvenile courts is based on reports of cases at the time of disposition, whereas the statistics for Federal juvenile offenders are based on reports assembled at different stages in the handling of the cases. The second part of the report thus includes information on offenders brought to the attention of the United States probation officers, on offenders received in jails and held pending trial, on offenders discharged from detention after being held in jails and other institutions pending trial, and on offenders placed under supervision or received under sentence in jails and in Federal institutions.

PART I.—JUVENILE-COURT STATISTICS FOR THE 2-YEAR PERIOD ENDED DECEMBER 31, 1936

THE REPORTING AREA

The reporting area for juvenile-court statistics for the calendar year 1936 included approximately 34 percent of the total population of the United States; the area for 1935 included 30 percent. The increase in 1936 was the result of an addition of certain courts located in more populous areas. The reporting area in 1936 included 5 entire States (Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, Rhode Island, and Utah); areas of Indiana and New York comprising 82 and 93 percent, respectively, of the population of those States; the District of Columbia; and approximately 40 individual courts in other States.

The reporting area for 1935 included 398 individual courts, of which 80 serve areas of 100,000 or more population. The reporting area for 1936 included 384 individual courts, of which 78 serve areas of 100,000 or more population.

Table A shows the number of courts reporting and the number of States represented in the reporting area for each year from 1927 to 1936, inclusive.

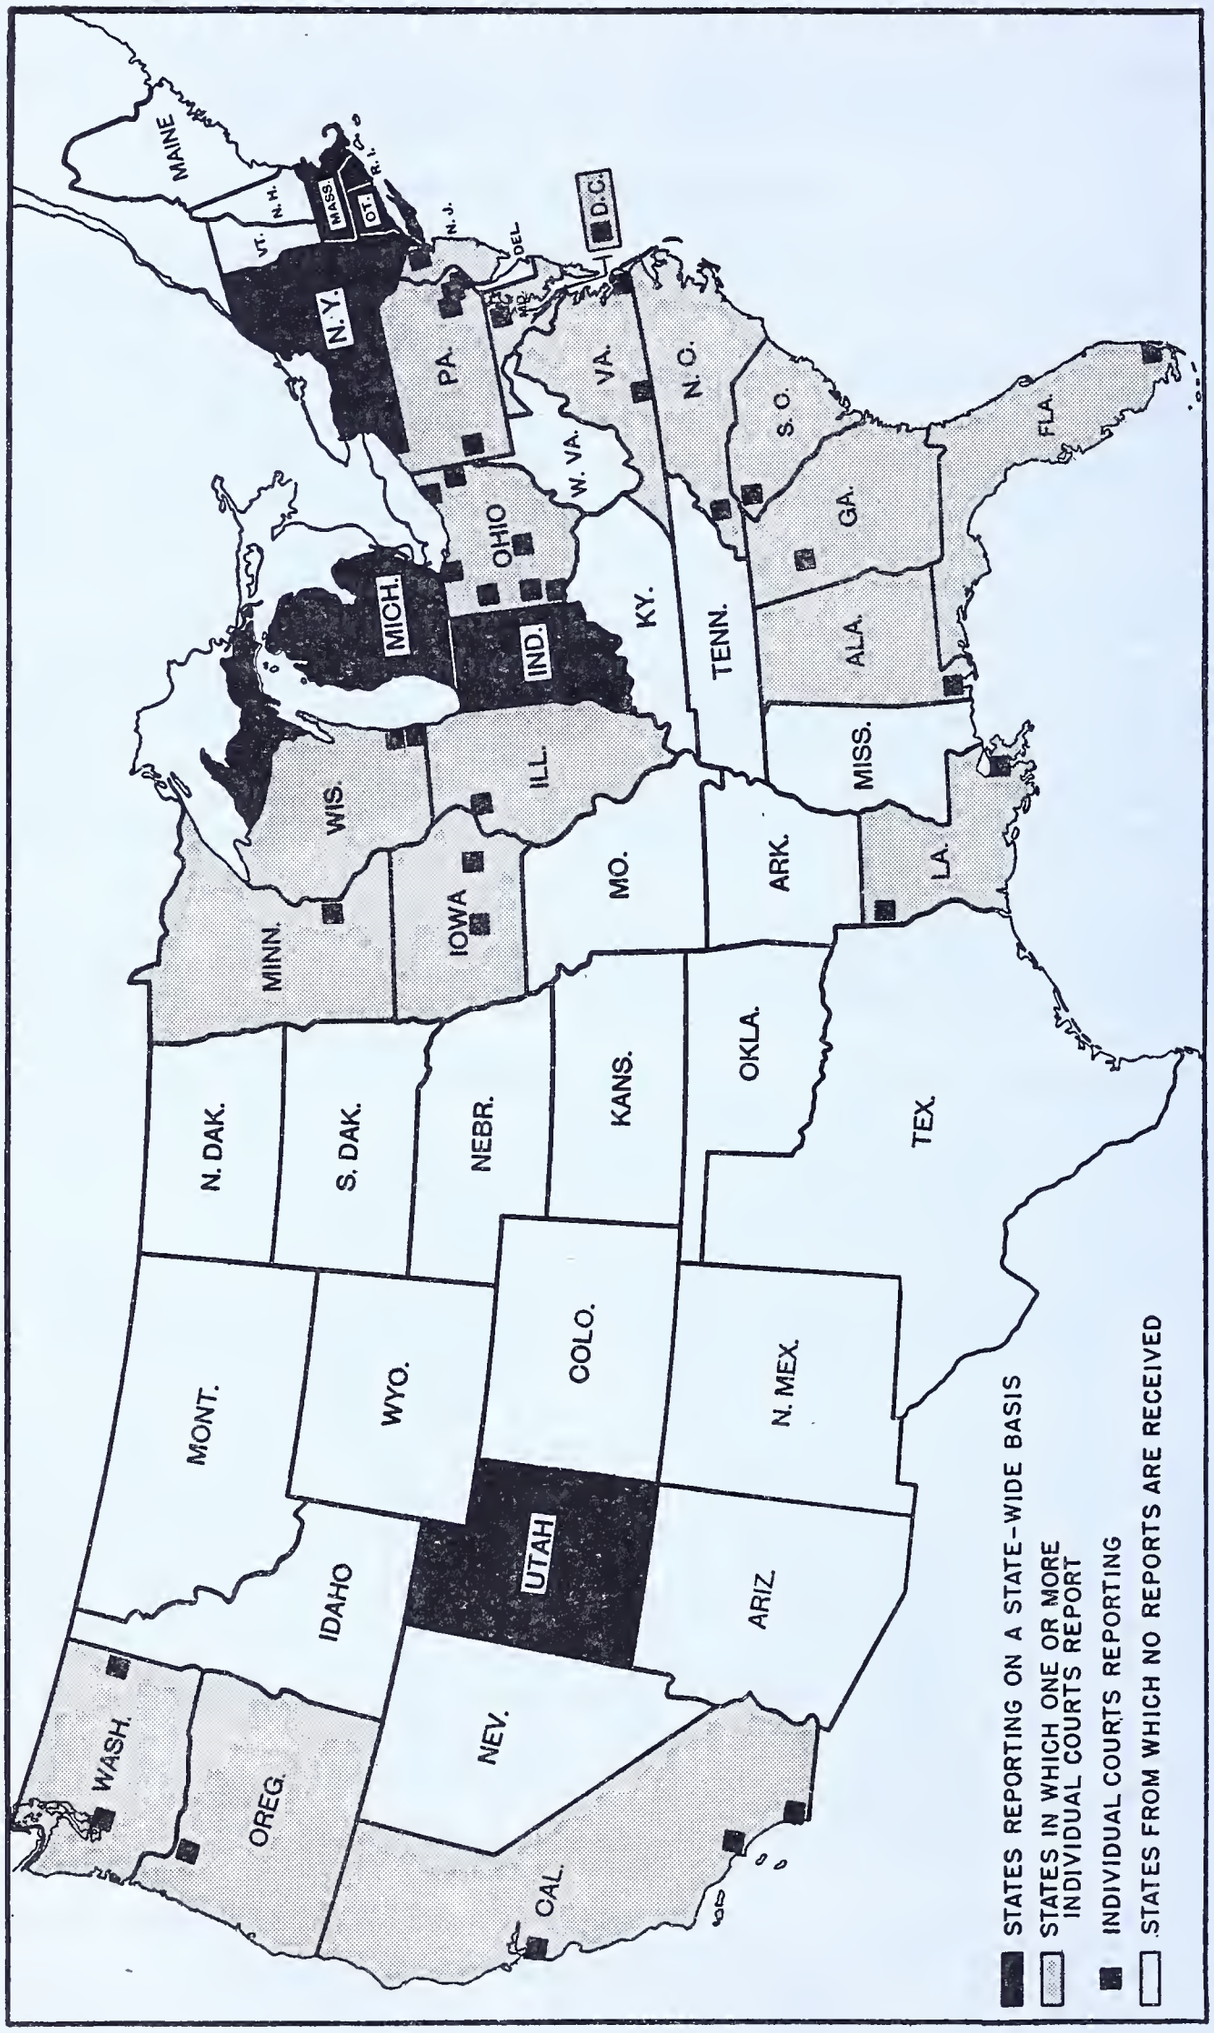
[8] Includes Indiana State courts and New York State courts serving 82 and 93 percent, respectively, of the total population of these States.



MAP 1.—GEOGRAPHIC DISTRIBUTION OF AREAS FROM WHICH JUVENILE-COURT STATISTICS WERE REPORTED IN 1936

The area reporting was particularly representative of large cities. In 1935 it included 65 percent of the population of the United States living in cities of 100,000 or more population; and in 1936, 66 percent.

The geographic distribution of the areas that reported for the calendar year 1936 is shown on map 1. The courts included in these areas submitted data regarding 63,320 delinquency cases, 23,599 dependency and neglect cases, 1,317 special-proceedings cases, and 20,808 cases of children discharged from supervision.

Table B gives the number of cases of delinquency, dependency and neglect, special-proceedings, and children discharged from supervision, as reported by the courts each year from 1927 to 1936.

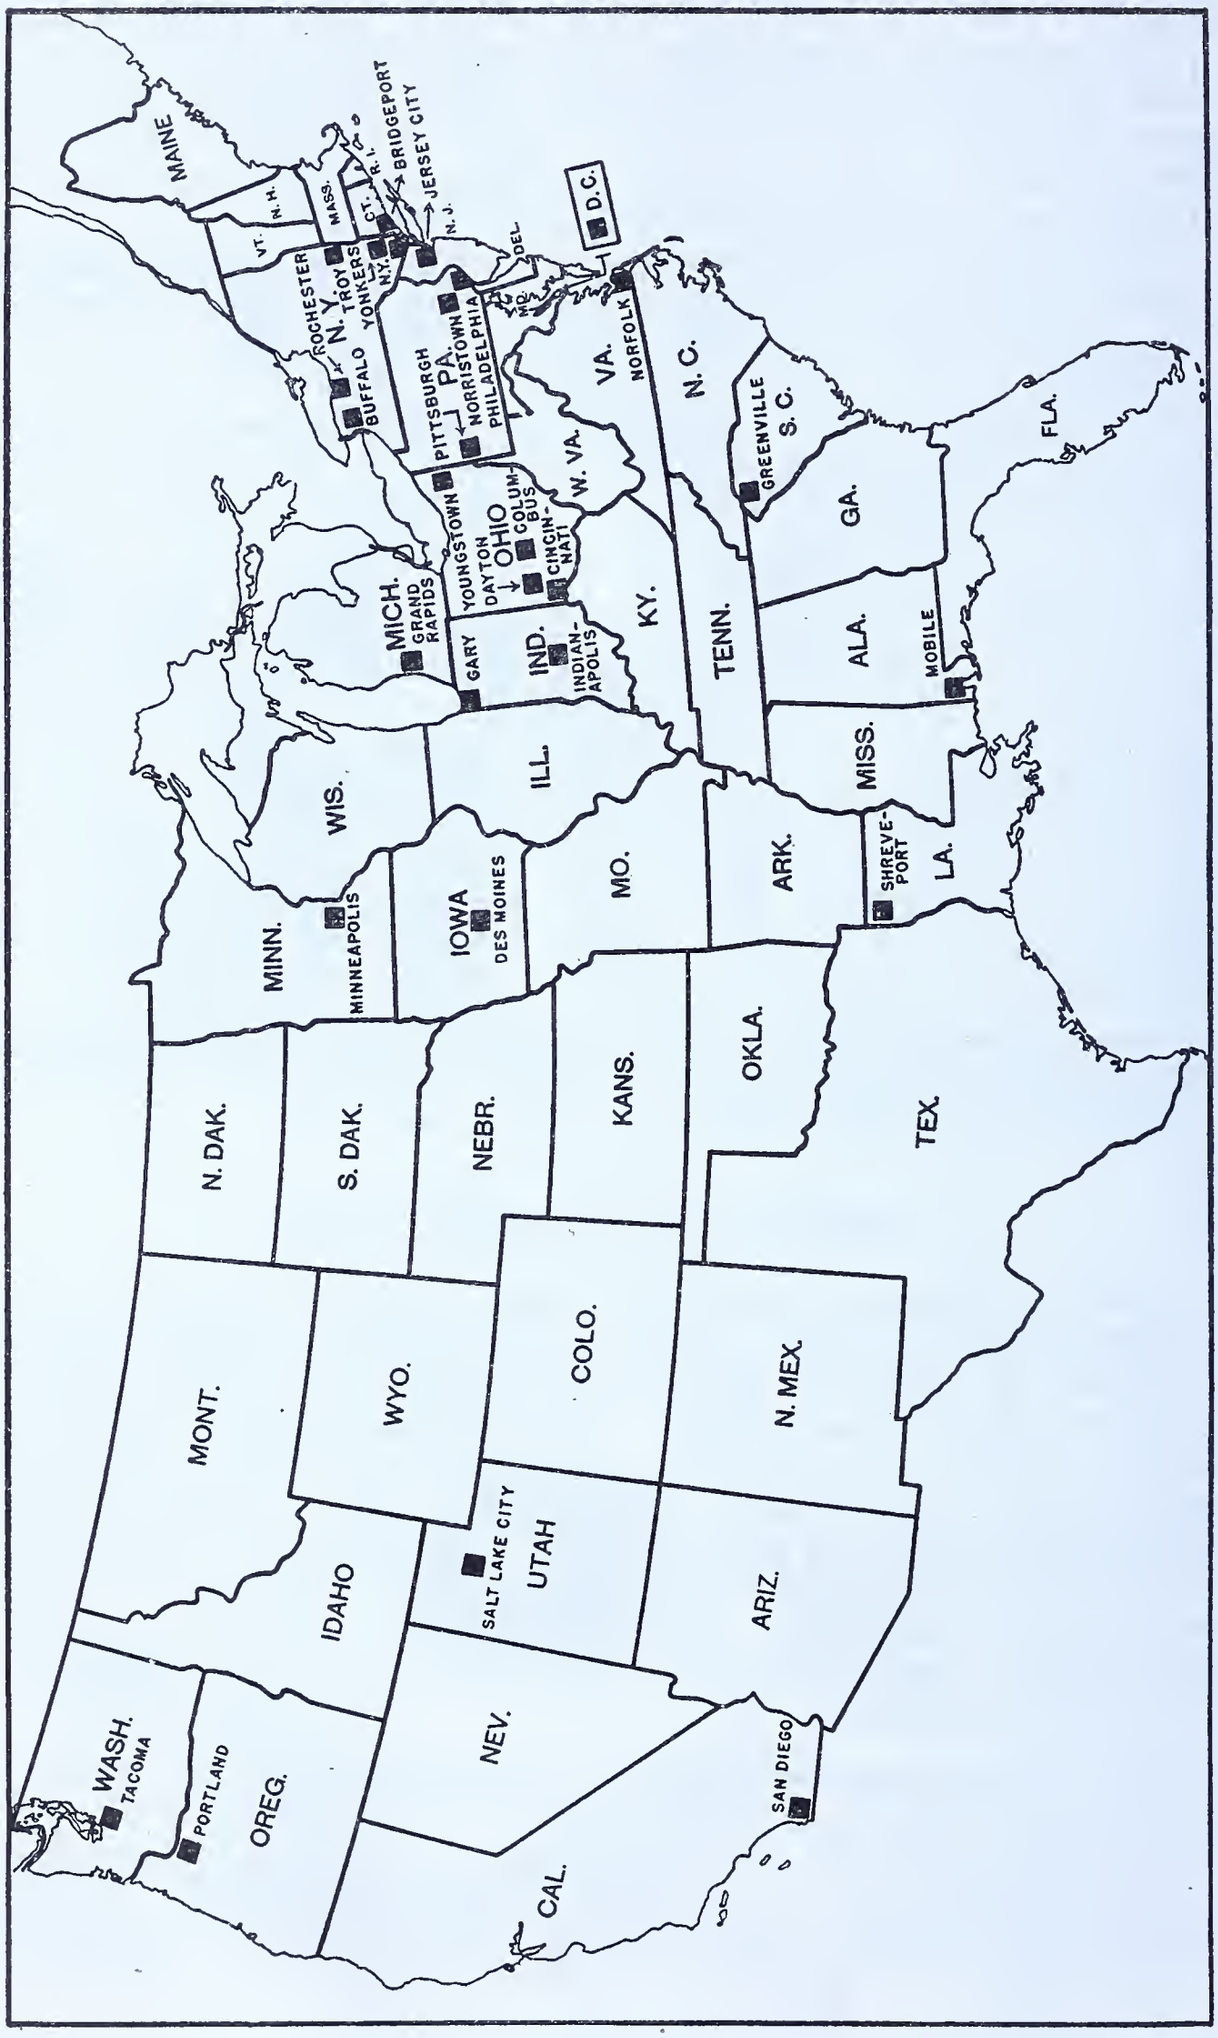
TRENDS IN DELINQUENCY CASES

Trends in delinquency cases from 1929 to 1936 are based on statistics received from 28 courts.[2] These courts are the only ones serving areas of 100,000 or more population that reported comparable figures for each year of the 8-year period. Although the courts included [3] have not been selected on a sampling basis, they are believed to be fairly representative of the entire reporting area. The combined areas include approximately 15 percent of the total population of the United States with all geographic areas represented. (Map 2.) The sex, race, and age distribution and the social characteristics of the children dealt with by these courts are comparable in general to similar data for all reporting courts.

[2] Trends in delinquency cases presented in the reports on juvenile-court statistics for 1932, 1933, and 1934 were based on statistics received from 30 courts. Two of these courts (Ramsey County, Minn., and Mercer County, N. J.) did not report in 1936.

[3] Mobile County, Ala.; San Diego County, Calif.; Bridgeport (city), Conn.; District of Columbia; Lake and Marion Counties, Ind.; Polk County, Iowa; Caddo Parish, La.; Kent County, Mich.; Hennepin County, Minn.; Hudson County, N. J.; New York City, and Erie, Monroe, Rensselaer, and Westchester Counties, N. Y.; Franklin, Hamilton, Mahoning, and Montgomery Counties, Ohio; Multnomah County, Oreg.; Allegheny and Montgomery Counties and Philadelphia (city and county), Pa.; Greenville County, S. C.; Third district, Utah; Norfolk (city), Va.; and Pierce County, Wash.

MAP 2.—GEOGRAPHIC DISTRIBUTION OF THE 28 COURTS THAT REPORTED JUVENILE-COURT STATISTICS EACH YEAR: 1929–36



Detailed data regarding delinquency cases disposed of by the courts in the entire reporting area during 1935 and 1936 are presented in the summary tables (pp. 25 to 62) and the source tables (pp. 63 to 139). This report, however, presents text material concerning the trends in juvenile delinquency only for the group of 28 courts for which comparable data are available for each year of the 8-year period.

For the 28 courts, material is presented showing the number of cases disposed of each year, the age of the boys and girls dealt with, the race of the boys and girls dealt with, the place where the child was living when referred to court, the reason for reference to court, the place of care pending hearing or disposition of the case, and the disposition made by the court. Analysis of previous court experience of children dealt with is presented for delinquency cases that were disposed of by 27 of the 28 courts during 1936.

Number of Cases.

During 1936 there were 26,773 cases disposed of by the 28 courts (22,630 boys' cases and 4,143 girls' cases). This number was substantially lower than in any previous year (table C). There was a decrease of 12 percent in 1936 as compared with 1935 in the total number of cases disposed of by the courts. The decrease in 1935 as compared with 1934 amounted to 5 percent. The number of boys' cases was 28 percent smaller in 1936 than in 1930, the peak year reported for boys' cases, while the number of girls' cases was 34 percent below the number for 1929, the peak year reported for girls' cases (chart 1, p. 8).

Table D shows the number of cases disposed of by each of the 28 courts during the period under review. Some of the individual courts showed a marked change between 1935 and 1936 in the number of cases disposed of. Eight courts reported a larger number of cases disposed of in 1936 than in 1935, although only 3 courts had an increase of more than 100 cases. Of the 20 courts reporting decreases from 1935 to 1936, the largest decreases appeared in Philadelphia, New York City, and Mahoning County, Ohio. The substantial reductions reported by these 3 courts were primarily responsible for the marked decrease in the total number of cases disposed of by the 28 courts.

In New York one of the contributing factors may have been the establishment during 1936 of a bureau of adjustments designed to settle certain types of children's cases out of court. In Philadelphia there was a substantial reduction in the number of cases referred to the court by the police. The decrease in the number of cases reported by the Mahoning County court was attributed to the fact that a large number of cases handled unofficially by this court were not reported to the Children's Bureau for the year 1936, whereas such cases were reported during previous years.[4] An estimate of the number of unofficial cases for this court for 1936 on the basis of the average proportion of such cases handled during the 7-year period from 1929 to 1935 indicates an increase of 319 cases from 1935 to 1936 rather than a decrease of 757 cases, which is shown in the tables of this report. If the 1936 figures for Mahoning County including the estimated number of unofficial cases were substituted for the reported figures in the combined total for the 28 courts, the decrease from 1935 to 1936 would amount to 9 percent instead of 12 percent. It is believed, however, that the omission of the unofficial cases of this court does not affect substantially the distribution of cases given in tables E to K.

[4] The information that the Mahoning County court had made this change in reporting was received after all tables included in the present report had been completed.

[1] Includes only official cases because court did not report unofficial cases every year.

The gradual decrease from 1930 to 1936 in the number of cases disposed of, though probably indicating some decrease in the amount of juvenile delinquency in the areas covered by the 28 courts, may also be affected by other factors, such as the policy of the police departments and other agencies in referring cases to court, the intake procedures of the courts, the relation of the courts to other agencies in the communities, and the extent to which the services of child-welfare agencies tend to reduce the necessity for court action.

Age of Boys and of Girls.

As has already been stated, the character of the community services available to children and the policies of the courts affect the number of delinquency cases handled by the courts. One of the important factors to be taken into consideration in interpreting the age distribution of the cases is the age under which the juvenile court has jurisdiction. The age limit for children coming under juvenile-court jurisdiction is established by State law and in most instances is uniform throughout a State, although for a few courts the maximum age has been set by special provision at a higher or a lower level than that for the State as a whole. There have been no changes in age limits of jurisdiction in these 28 courts during the 8-year period. Fourteen of the courts had jurisdiction of children under 16 years [5] of age; 3, under 17 years; 10, under 18 years; and 1, under 21 years.

Table E shows the age distribution of the boys and girls who were dealt with in the cases disposed of by the 28 courts during the period from 1929 to 1936. There has been very little change from year to year in the proportion of cases in each age group, although during 1935 and 1936 there was a slight tendency for the percentage of cases involving children under 14 years of age to decrease and for the percentage of cases involving children 14 to 16 years of age to increase.

In 1936, 40 percent of the boys and 26 percent of the girls were under 14 years of age; 44 percent of the boys and 50 percent of the girls were 14 and 15 years of age; and 16 percent of the boys and 24 percent of the girls were 16 years or over. The proportion of cases involving boys and girls over 16 years of age would no doubt have been much larger had it not been for the limitations on the age jurisdiction of the courts as previously stated. The number of cases of children 16 and 17 years of age constituted 34 percent of the total number of cases handled by the 16 courts that were authorized to deal with children of these ages, and nearly equaled the number of 14- and 15-year-old children, who constituted by far the largest group in the courts with jurisdiction limited to younger children.

Chart 2 shows the age distribution of the boys and girls dealt with in the cases disposed of during 1936. The girls were older on the average than the boys.

[5] The 2 reporting courts in Indiana had jurisdiction of boys under 16 years, girls under 18 years.

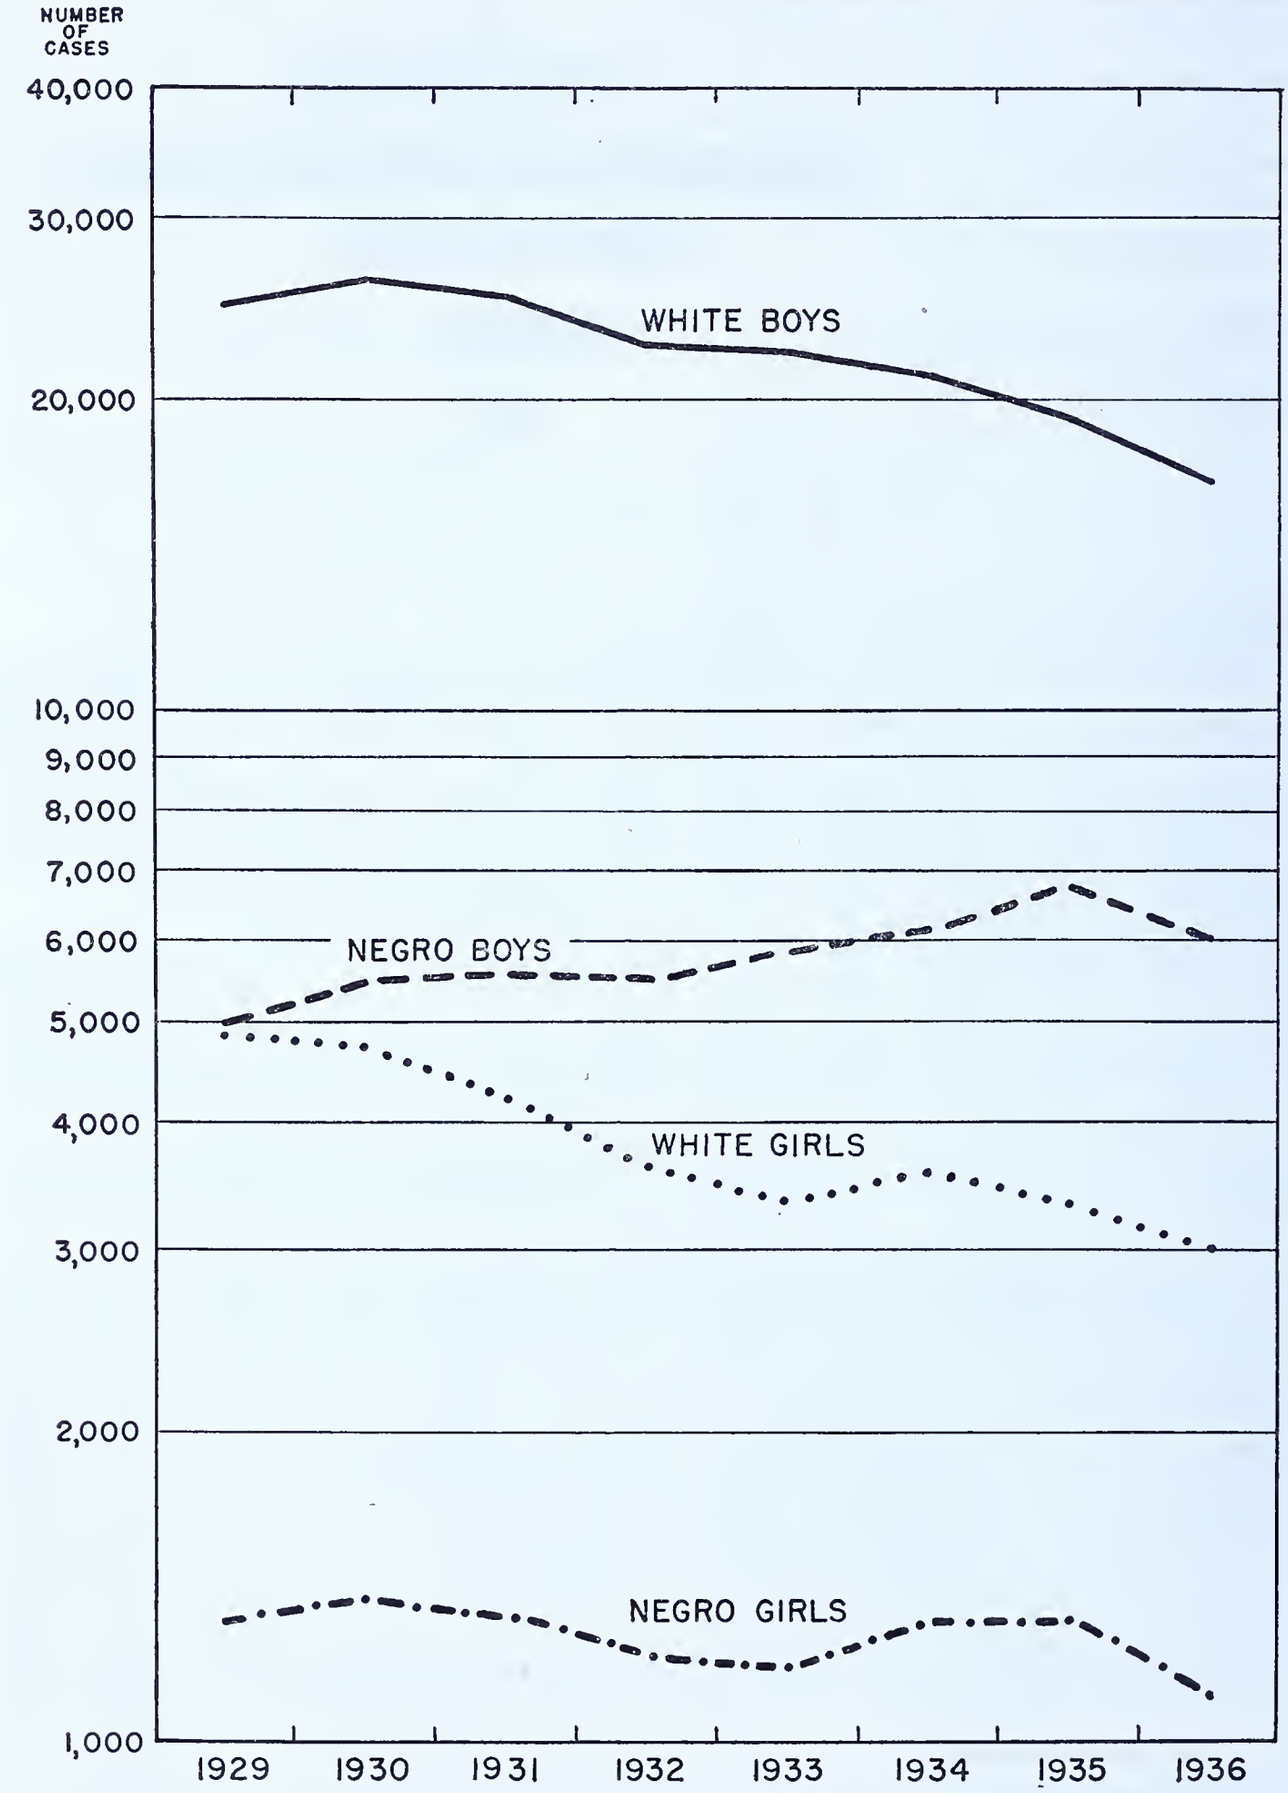
courts the percentage of cases of white boys decreased gradually from 1929 to 1936, while the percentage of cases of Negro boys increased. In 1936, 27 percent of the boys' cases were those of Negroes.

CHART 3.—RACE AND SEX OF CHILDREN IN DELINQUENCY CASES DISPOSED OF BY 28 COURTS IN 1929-36



Among girls' cases dealt with by the courts there was a gradual decrease in the percentage of cases of white girls, and a corresponding increase in the percentage of cases of Negro girls, in each year of the period until 1936, when the percentage of cases of white girls increased slightly (from 72 percent in 1935 to 73 percent in 1936).

Among the cases of white children dealt with during the 8-year period only a few have been cases of children of foreign birth. This is doubtless because of the fact that only a small proportion of the foreign-born white population is under the maximum age of juvenile-court jurisdiction. When analysis is made, however, of the nativity of the parents of the native white children dealt with by the 28 courts during the year 1936, it appears that in nearly two-fifths (38 percent) of the boys' cases one or both parents were foreign-born. The proportion of girls' cases in which one or both parents were foreign-born was somewhat smaller (26 percent).

Home Conditions.

Table G gives information in regard to home conditions of the children whose cases were disposed of by these 28 courts. There has been very little variation from year to year in the proportion of cases of children living in their own homes and of children living in other places (other family homes, institutions, and so forth). In 1935 and 1936 the children in 91 percent of the cases were living in their own homes and the children in 9 percent were living in other places. The proportion of cases in which the child lived with both his own parents was slightly smaller in 1936 than in any other year of the 8-year period (60 percent as compared with 64 percent in 1929). The proportion of cases in which the child was living with one parent only was correspondingly larger (23 percent in 1936 as compared with 20 percent in 1929). The increase was found mainly in cases of children whose parents were separated because of divorce, desertion of one parent, or other reasons.

Reason for Reference to Court.

The reasons for referring boys' and girls' delinquency cases to court are shown in table H. The reasons for which the boys were referred to court differed greatly from those which brought the girls to court. The most frequent offenses for which boys were brought before the courts in 1936 were stealing and acts of carelessness or mischief (including traffic violations), whereas girls were referred most frequently for running away, for being ungovernable, and for sex offenses (chart 4).

Although the number of boys' cases referred for stealing has decreased irregularly throughout the period, the proportion of such cases has increased each year since 1933. In 1935 and 1936 the proportion of boys' cases referred for stealing (46 and 48 percent, respectively) was higher than in any previous year. On the other hand, the number as well as the proportion of boys' cases referred to court for acts of carelessness or mischief (including traffic violation) has decreased gradually each year since 1932, and in 1935 and 1936 there was a smaller proportion referred for this reason (30 and 28 percent, respectively) than in any other year of the period. The percentage of boys' cases referred for all other reasons has remained approximately the same in each year of the 8-year period.

The number of girls' cases reported for all reasons for referral has decreased irregularly during the period. Among the girls' cases reported in 1935 and 1936, there were also decreases in the proportion reported for all reasons for referral except for being ungovernable and for sex offenses. The proportion of girls' cases referred for these offenses was larger in 1936 than in any other year of the period.

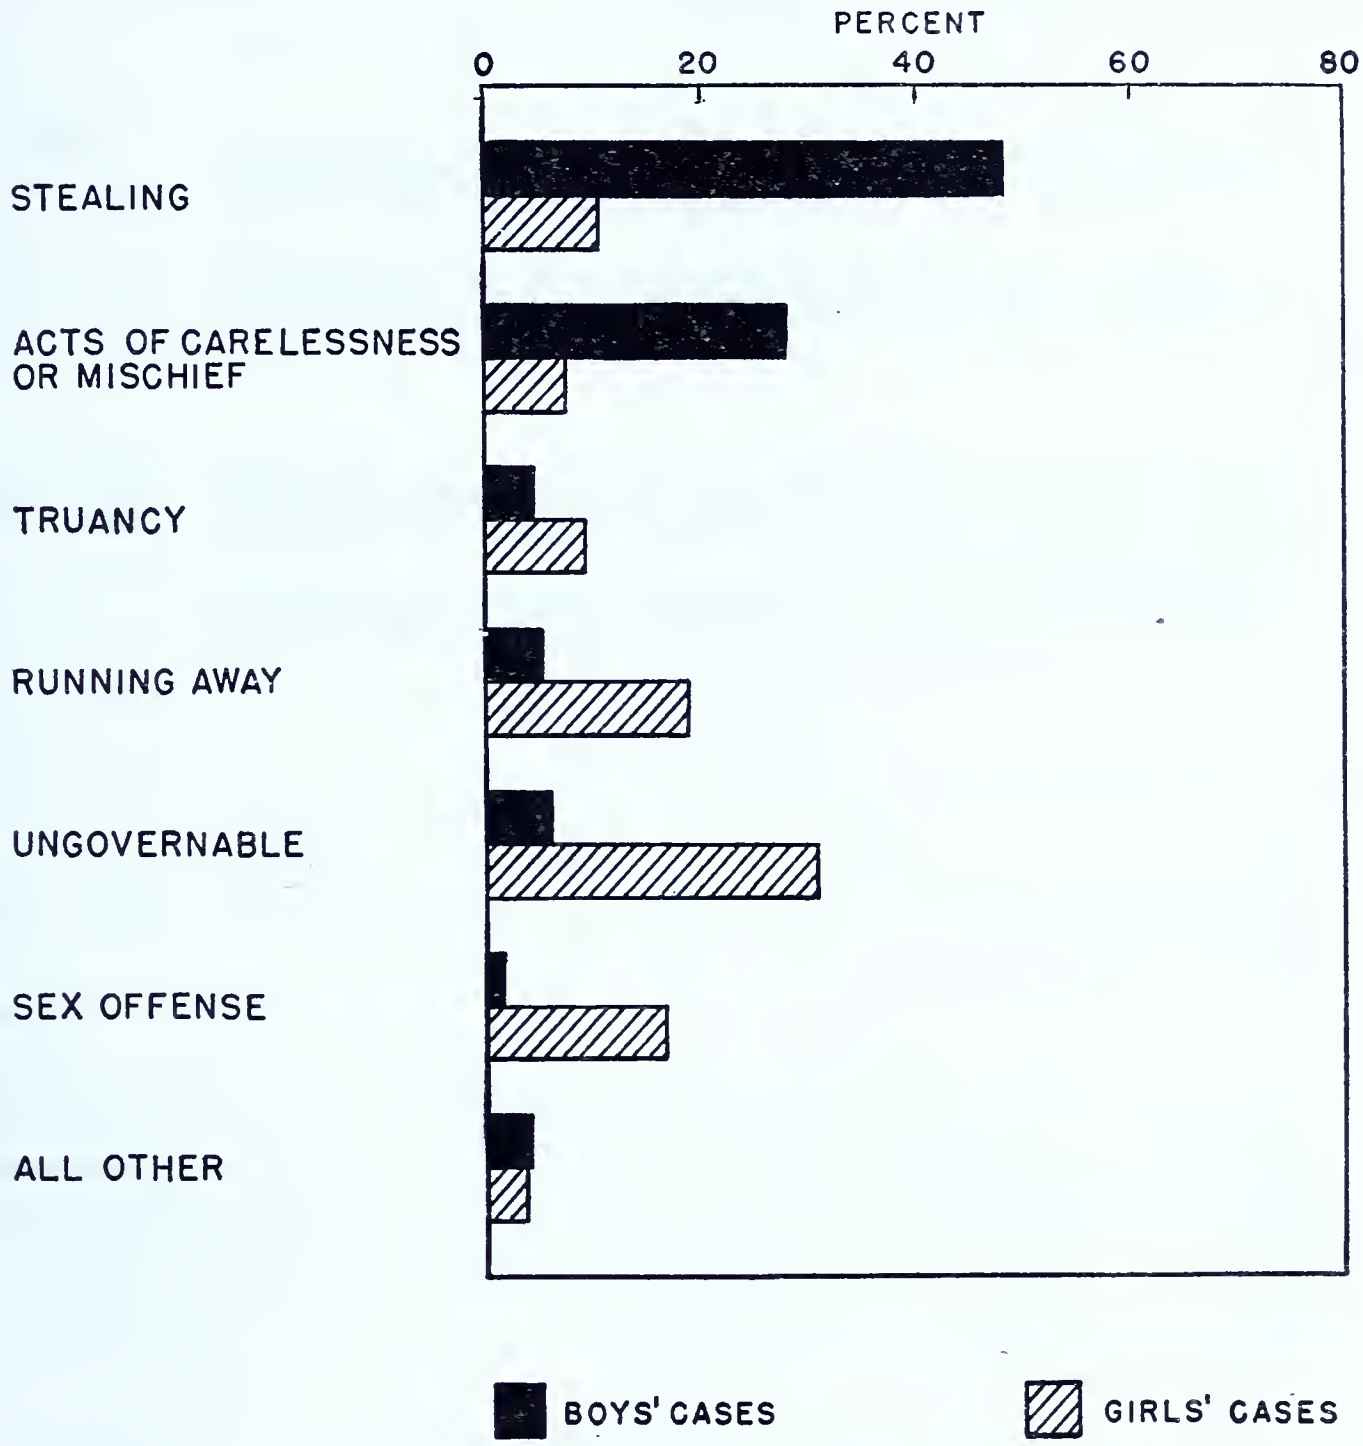
CHART 4.—REASONS FOR REFERENCE TO COURT IN BOYS' AND GIRLS' DELINQUENCY CASES DISPOSED OF BY 28 COURTS IN 1936



The percentage referred for being ungovernable was 31 in 1936, as compared with 29 in 1935; the percentage referred for sex offenses was 17 in 1936, as compared with 14 in the previous year. In 1936 the largest decrease was in the group referred for acts of carelessness or mischief: The proportion (8 percent) as well as the number of girls' cases referred for this reason was lower than in any other year of the period.

Place of Detention Care.

During 1935 and 1936 in almost two-fifths of the boys' cases and approximately half of the girls' cases the children were detained overnight or longer (table I). There was, however, a gradual decrease during the period from 1929 to 1936 in the proportion of cases having detention care. Among boys' cases this decrease was from 47 percent in 1929 to 37 percent in 1936. In girls' cases the decrease was from 53 percent in 1929 to 45 percent in 1936.

[3] Includes a few cases of children cared for part of the time in jails or police stations and part of the time elsewhere.
[4] Includes a few cases of children held in more than one place of care but in places other than detention homes, jails, or police stations.

The place of detention care most frequently used in each year of the period for both boys and girls was the detention home. In 1936, 67 percent of the boys and 70 percent of the girls who were detained were cared for in detention homes. "Other institutions" were second primarily because of the large number of cases reported by the New York City court, where a cooperative arrangement exists with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Jails and police stations were third for boys, and boarding homes or other family homes were third for girls (chart 5). There has been a significant decrease from 1929 to 1936 in the use of jails and police stations for the detention of children. In 1929, boys in 1,109 cases and girls in 99 cases were detained in jails or police stations; in 1936 boys in 575 cases and girls in 25 cases were detained in such places.

The places of detention care used by the courts are dependent upon the facilities available in the local communities and upon the attitudes with regard to the necessity for detention. In some localities practically all children brought to court in delinquency cases are detained, whereas in others only certain types of delinquencies are considered serious enough to warrant detention care for the children.

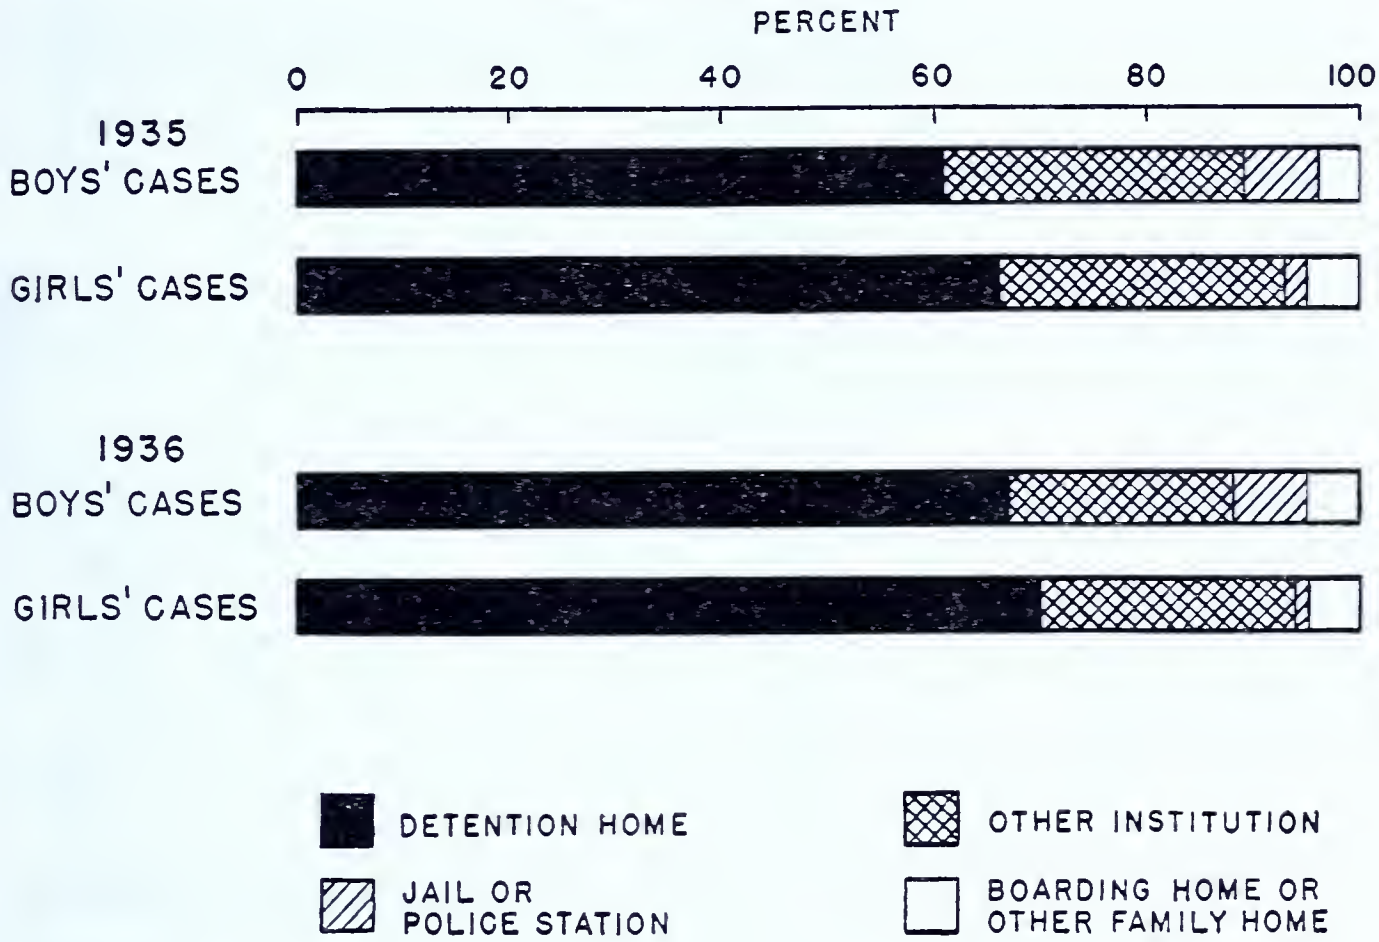
CHART 5.—PLACE OF DETENTION CARE IN BOYS' AND GIRLS' DELINQUENCY CASES DISPOSED OF BY 28 COURTS: 1935 AND 1936



Disposition of Cases.

Table J, giving the disposition of boys' and girls' delinquency cases, shows that since 1933 there has been a marked decrease in the proportion of both boys' and girls' cases dismissed, adjusted, or held open without further action. The proportion of cases disposed of in this manner in 1936 (46 percent of the boys' and 36 percent of the girls') was smaller than in any other year of the period. Among the boys' cases, the percentage in which the boy was supervised by a probation officer (33 percent) and the percentage in which the boy was committed or referred to an institution (11 percent) were larger in 1936 than in any other year.

The methods of disposition of boys' and of girls' cases have differed considerably during the period. Cases dismissed, adjusted, or held open without further action have been proportionately more frequent in boys' cases than in girls' cases, whereas commitments or referrals to institutions or agencies have been more frequent in girls' cases. In 1936, 20 percent of the girls' cases were disposed of by commitment or referral to an institution, and 9 percent by commitment or referral to an agency or individual. Chart 6 indicates the disposition of the boys' and girls' cases that were dealt with by the 28 courts in 1935 and 1936.

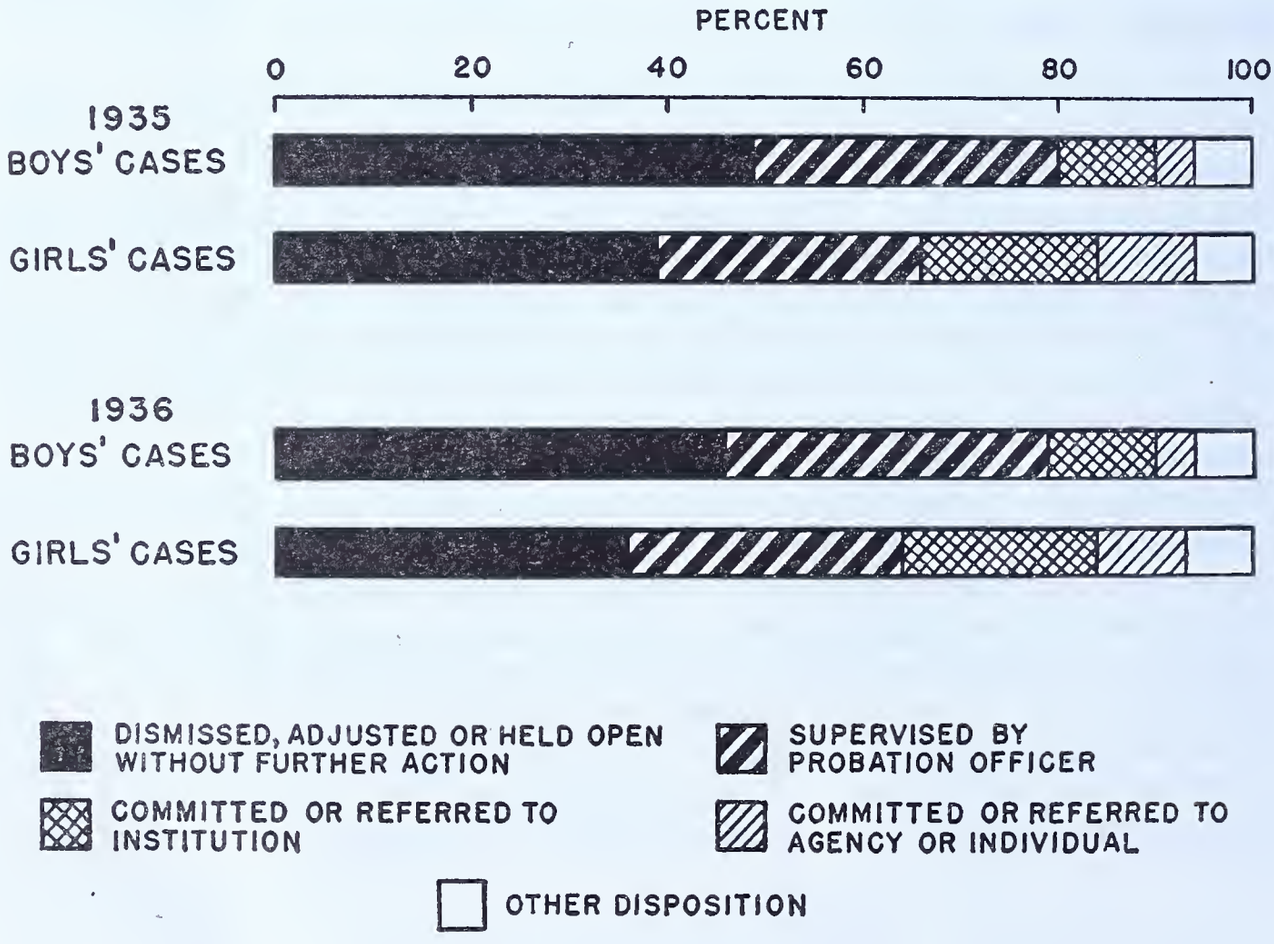
CHART 6.—DISPOSITION OF BOYS' AND GIRLS' DELINQUENCY CASES DEALT WITH BY 28 COURTS: 1935 AND 1936



Previous Court Experience.

Table K shows the previous court experience as delinquents of the white and Negro boys and girls 7 to 15 years of age in cases for which this information was obtained. Cases of children 16 years of age and over are excluded, because not all the courts have jurisdiction of children of these ages. (See p. 9.)

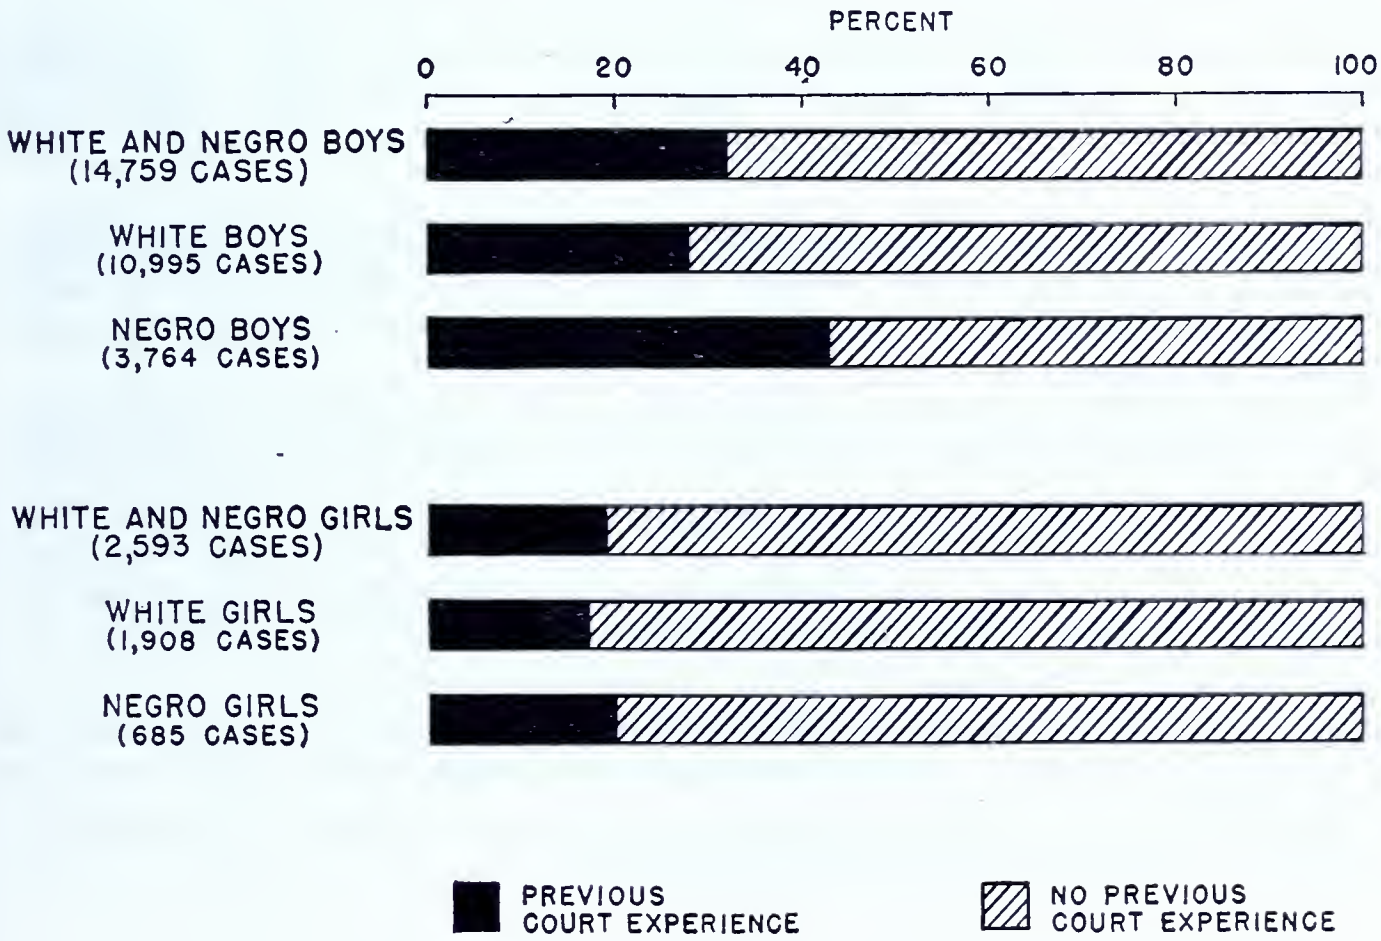
CHART 7.—PREVIOUS COURT EXPERIENCE OF WHITE AND NEGRO BOYS AND GIRLS' 7 TO 15 YEARS OF AGE IN DELINQUENCY CASES DISPOSED OF BY 27 COURTS IN 1936



Of the 17,352 cases of children 7 to 15 years of age coming before 27 courts during 1936, boys more frequently than girls had had previous court experience. In 32 percent of the boys' cases and 19 percent of the girls' cases the children had had court experience previously in 1936 or in earlier years (chart 7).

Among cases of Negro children, the boys in 43 percent and the girls in 20 percent of the cases had had previous court experience. The corresponding percentages among cases of white children were much smaller, the boys in 28 percent and the girls in 17 percent of the cases having had previous court experience.

TRENDS IN DEPENDENCY AND NEGLECT CASES

A general downward trend is indicated in the number of dependency and neglect cases disposed of by 27 courts [6] that reported throughout the period 1929–36 (chart 8). During 1936 there were 11,490 cases disposed of by these courts (5,865 boys' cases and 5,625 girls' cases). The decrease from 1935 to 1936 in the total number of cases disposed of amounted to 4 percent; boys' cases decreased 2 percent, and girls' cases decreased 5 percent.

Table L shows the total number of boys' and of girls' dependency and neglect cases disposed of by these 27 courts from 1929 to 1936.

TABLE L.—Number of boys' and girls' dependency and neglect cases disposed of by 27 courts that reported throughout the period 1929–36

Year	Dependency and neglect cases disposed of			Year	Dependency and neglect cases disposed of
	Total	Boys	Girls		Total	Boys	Girls
1929	14,725	7,529	7,196	1933	12,618	6,491	6,127
1930	14,897	7,719	7,178	1934	12,803	6,589	6,214
1931	14,280	7,382	6,898	1935	11,917	5,989	5,928
1932	13,063	6,735	6,328	1936	11,490	5,865	5,625

In 1936, 14 of the 27 courts disposed of more, and 13 courts of fewer, cases of dependency and neglect than in 1935. However, the difference in the number of cases disposed of by most courts was small (table M, p. 22).

The gradual decrease in the number of dependency and neglect cases disposed of by the courts does not necessarily indicate that there has been an actual decrease in the number of dependent and neglected children in this reporting area. The number of such cases dealt with by the courts depends to some extent upon general economic and social conditions. The decrease, however, may be affected by such factors as the growing tendency for other child-welfare agencies to provide social treatment for dependent and neglected children and the availability of relief (both direct and work relief) from public sources.

[6] Of the 28 courts that reported delinquency cases each year from 1929 to 1936, all except the Hudson County, N. J., court reported dependency and neglect cases.

Table N gives information as to the age of children dealt with in dependency and neglect cases by the 27 courts during the period 1929–36. Thirteen of the courts had jurisdiction of children under 16 years [7] of age; 3, under 17 years; 10, under 18 years; and 1, under 21 years.

[7] The 2 reporting courts in Indiana had jurisdiction of boys under 16 years, girls under 17 years.

There was little change from year to year in the proportion of cases in each age group. The cases were distributed fairly evenly in each of the age groups under 16 years of age. The percentage of children 16 years of age and over was very small, 2 percent in each year of the period.

Table O shows the race and nativity of the children dealt with in dependency and neglect cases. In each year of the period the great majority of the children were white. In more than half of these cases the children were native white of native parentage, the next largest group being native white children of foreign or mixed parentage. The foreign-born group was small, accounting for between 1 and 2 percent of the cases in each year of the period. Cases of Negro children constituted slightly more than 15 percent of the total number of cases in each year.

Approximately three-fourths of the children dealt with in dependency and neglect cases were living in their own homes. Table P shows that in nearly three-fifths of these cases the children were living with one parent only.

Table Q shows that in 1936 almost one-third of the dependency cases (31 percent) were dismissed, adjusted, or held open without further action. In slightly less than one-fourth of the cases the child was supervised by a probation officer in the child's own home or in another family home. In 1936 the percentage of cases of dependent and neglected children (29 percent) in which the children were committed or referred to an agency or individual was larger than in any other year of the 8-year period.

[1] Of the 364 courts reporting delinquency cases, 357 reported boys' cases and 305 reported girls' cases.
[2] Some courts have jurisdiction under special circumstances beyond the age specified; also courts occasionally deal informally with children who are just beyond the age of juvenile-court jurisdiction.

PART II.—FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS FOR THE YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1936

78616°—39——10

INTRODUCTION

This part of the report presents information concerning the juveniles under 19 years of age who violated Federal laws and came to the attention of Federal authorities during the year ended June 30, 1936.[1] Cases of children violating Federal laws who were dealt with by juvenile courts are not included. In some communities serious violations of Federal laws as well as many minor violations are handled by the juvenile court. Such cases were included with the figures presented in part I, Juvenile-Court Statistics. The number of cases of children dealt with by the Federal courts is influenced by such factors as the age under which the juvenile courts have jurisdiction, the attitudes of local authorities toward reference to juvenile rather than Federal courts, and the degree of development of the State facilities for juvenile-court work.

The data presented in part II regarding Federal juvenile offenders are not comparable to the data presented in part I, Juvenile-Court Statistics, because the information for juvenile-court statistics is assembled from one source: Namely, cases disposed of, whereas statistics for Federal juvenile offenders are assembled from four different sources, each representing a different stage in the handling of the case. It has been necessary, therefore, to present the material in four sections according to the source of the reports received. Each section, however, presents information regarding some particular aspect in the treatment of the juvenile offenders. The first section, Federal juvenile offenders brought to the attention of United States probation officers, includes data on the geographical distribution, movement, and disposition of cases; the second section, Federal juvenile offenders received in jails and held pending trial, includes information concerning the age and sex of the offenders; the third section, Federal juvenile offenders discharged from detention after being held pending trial, includes data on the place and length of detention and the type of discharge from detention; and the fourth section, Federal juvenile offenders placed on probation and those received under sentence in jails and in Federal institutions, presents material regarding the types of offenses.

FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS BROUGHT TO THE ATTENTION OF UNITED STATES PROBATION OFFICERS[2]

Information available for the year ended June 30, 1936, regarding Federal juvenile offenders brought to the attention of United States

[1] The statistics have been compiled by the Bureau of Prisons of the United States Department of Justice and are based upon reports received in that Bureau from United States probation officers, from United States marshals, and from Federal institutions that received Federal offenders by court commitment.

[2] The Federal judicial districts covered by the statistics of Federal juvenile offenders for the year ended June 30, 1936, included Puerto Rico and 79 of the 84 Federal judicial districts in the United States. Statistics of cases from the five districts not covered, where no probation officer was on duty during the year, are included with those reported by other districts whenever the offenders were referred to United States probation officers in the adjoining districts. Reports of the District of Columbia are not included, as the administrative relationship of the District of Columbia courts to the Department of Justice differs from that of other Federal courts.

probation officers, includes the movement of cases, the geographical distribution of cases, and the disposition of cases.

Reports from the United States probation officers inidcate that 2,693 cases of juveniles under 19 years of age charged with violation of Federal laws came to their attention during the year ended June 30, 1936. This number is 8 percent higher than the number (2,501) reported for the year ended June 30, 1935. Of the 2,693 cases handled during 1936, 2,263 (84 percent) were new cases, and 430 were cases that had been carried over from the preceding year. Of the total number of cases, 2,235 (83 percent) were disposed of and 458 were carried over to the next fiscal year (table A).

[1] Exclusive of the following districts in which there was no United States probation officer on duty during the year ended June 30, 1936: Delaware, Ohio (northern), Utah, West Virginia (northern), and Wisconsin (eastern); however, a large proportion of the Federal juvenile offenders in these districts are regularly referred to the United States probation officers in adjoining districts. No cases were reported from Michigan (western).

The proportion of cases of Federal juvenile offenders brought to the attention of United States probation officers in each of the geographic divisions of the United States is shown in table B. Slightly more than one-fifth (22 percent) of the cases were reported by the four northern divisions, in which the population 15 to 18 years of age comprises 56 percent of the population of these ages in the continental United States and Puerto Rico. On the other hand, 69 percent of the total number of cases were in Federal judicial districts in the three southern divisions that include only 34 percent of the population. The proportion of cases from the two western divisions was approximately the same as the proportion of the population included in those areas. The variation in the number of Federal juvenile offenders in the different geographic divisions may be accounted for in part by the variations in State facilities for juvenile-court and probation work. Where such facilities have been well established the general practice has been to refer cases of Federal juvenile offenders to the State courts for investigation and disposition. Another factor influencing the number of Federal juvenile offenders in the different geographic divisions is the age up to which the State juvenile courts have jurisdiction.

[1] Very few Federal juvenile offenders are under 15 years of age.
[2] Excludes the District of Columbia because the administrative relation of the District of Columbia courts to the Department of Justice differs from that of other Federal courts.
[3] Less than 1 percent.

Table C gives the number and percentage distribution of cases diverted to State authorities and disposed of by Federal authorities during the year ended June 30, 1936. A slightly smaller percentage of cases of juveniles was diverted to State authorities during that year than during the year ended June 30, 1935 (8 percent as compared with 9 percent). The small proportion of cases transferred to State authorities may be attributed largely to the following factors: (1) State facilities for the care of juveniles are lacking or inadequate in many localities; (2) in localities where adequate facilities do exist, they frequently are not available for the older juveniles, especially those 18 years of age, who make up a large percentage of the Federal offenders. These older juveniles, therefore, in many cases can be handled more effectively by Federal courts than by State courts; (3) Federal probation service is frequently preferable to the use of the available State facilities, and, likewise, the facilities available to the Federal Government for institutional treatment are often superior to those available to the States.

Consequently it has become apparent that the Federal juvenile offender problem can be solved only to a limited degree by the diversion of juveniles to the States.[3]

Of the 2,235 cases of juveniles brought to the attention of United States probation officers during the year ended June 30, 1936, the juveniles in 30 percent were committed to institutions—16 percent with periods of commitment exceeding 1 year and 14 percent with [3] In recognition of this situation and in order to provide for improvement in the methods of dealing with the large proportion of juvenile offenders that cannot be diverted to State authorities, a Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act was passed by Congress and was signed by the President on June 16, 1938. The principal features of the act are as follows: (1) It applies to all Federal offenders under 18 years of age provided they have not committed offenses punishable by death or life imprisonment; (2) cases of juvenile delinquents are to be heard on information and tried without a jury before a district judge who may hold court for that purpose at any time and place within the district—in chambers or otherwise; (3) if found guilty the juvenile may be placed on probation or he may be committed to the United States Attorney General who may designate any public or private agency for the custody and care of the offender; (4) the Attorney General is to be notified of the arrest of any juvenile, and he may provide for the detention of such offenders in a juvenile home; (5) the Board of Parole of the Department of Justice is given power to parole a juvenile at any time.

periods of commitment of 1 year or less. Cases dismissed, no-billed, nol-prossed, and cases in which the juvenile was found not guilty constituted 18 percent of the total cases. In 32 percent of the cases the juvenile was placed on probation.

There was no change from 1935 to 1936 in the proportion of cases in which the juveniles were committed to institutions. There was, however, a slightly larger percentage of cases in 1936 than in 1935 in which the juvenile was placed on probation (33 percent as compared with 27 percent). A correspondingly smaller percentage of cases were dismissed, no-billed, nol-prossed, or found not guilty in 1936 compared with 1935.

FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS RECEIVED IN JAILS AND HELD PENDING TRIAL [4]

The data available for the year ended June 30, 1936, regarding cases of Federal juvenile offenders received in jails to be held pending trial include the age and the sex of the offenders. Similar information is also presented for the years ended June 30, 1935, and June 30, 1934.

During the year ended June 30, 1936, there were 1,617 cases in which the juvenile offenders were received in jails pending trail (1,482 boys' cases and 135 girls' cases).[5] This number was 6 percent greater than the number reported in the year ended June 30, 1935, and 39 percent greater than during the year ended June 30, 1934 (table D).

[4] Statistics obtained from reports submitted by United States marshals.

[5] Offenders under 19 years of age constituted 5 percent of the total number of cases of Federal offenders received in jails and held pending trial during the years ended June 30, 1935, and 1934, as well as during 1936.

The girls received in jails were younger on the average than the boys. Of the girls received, those in 44 percent of the cases in 1936 and 33 percent in 1935 were under 17 years of age, whereas the boys were of these ages in only 27 percent and 28 percent of the cases in 1936 and 1935, respectively. In both these years juveniles 18 years of age constituted the largest group of offenders of each sex.

FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS DISCHARGED FROM DETENTION AFTER BEING HELD PENDING TRIAL

The information available for the year ended June 30, 1936, regarding Federal juvenile offenders discharged from detention after being held pending trial includes the place and length of detention prior to trial, and the type of discharge from detention. The figures include all cases of juveniles that were discharged during the year—both those received for detention prior to the beginning of the year and those received during the year. They do not include cases of offenders received for detention that were not discharged during the year.

During the year ended June 30, 1936, there were 1,939 cases of juvenile offenders discharged from detention after being held pending trial (1,790 boys' cases and 149 girls' cases). This number shows an 8 percent increase over the number (1,800) reported in the year ended June 30, 1935.

Table E, giving information concerning the place of detention, shows that in 90 percent of the cases the Federal juvenile offenders discharged from detention were held in local jails, 8 percent were detained in Federal jails, and 2 percent were held in juvenile detention homes. (The small proportion of juveniles held in Federal jails is accounted for by the fact that there were such jails only in Louisiana, Michigan, New York, and Texas.)

Table F gives data regarding the length of detention pending trial of the Federal juvenile offenders that were discharged from detention during the year ended June 30, 1936. Of the cases of offenders held 1 day or more, 65 percent were held in jails and other places less than a month, 24 percent were held 1 month but less than 3 months, and 8 percent were detained 3 months or more.

When length of detention pending trial is analyzed for the group of cases in which the juveniles were released on bail or recognizance it appears that only 8 percent were detained 1 month or longer. However, of the cases in which the offenders were not released on bail or recognizance, 41 percent were held 1 month or longer (table G).

The type of discharge from detention most frequently used for Federal juvenile offenders held pending trial was release on bail or recognizance (table H). In almost one-third (32 percent) of the cases the juveniles were released in this manner. In approximately one-sixth (17 percent) of the cases the juveniles were transferred under sentence to Federal penitentiaries, reformatories, or State institutions; in 15 percent they were sentenced to jail; in 13 percent they were placed on probation; and in 10 percent of the cases they were dismissed. Other types of discharge were used for relatively small numbers of cases.

FEDERAL JUVENILE OFFENDERS PLACED ON PROBATION AND THOSE RECEIVED UNDER SENTENCE IN JAILS AND IN FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS [6]

Data available regarding Federal juvenile offenders placed on probation and those received under sentence in jails and in Federal institutions include the age, sex, and the offense charged for the three groups of offenders. Similar information is also presented for the years ended June 30, 1935, and June 30, 1934.

Federal juvenile offenders placed on probation and those received in jails and Federal institutions under sentence comprise the great majority of offenders for whom Federal authorities continue responsibility and supervision after disposition of the case. Table I shows that during the year ended June 30, 1936, in 664 cases the Federal offenders under 19 years of age were placed under the supervision of United States probation officers; in 379 cases they were committed to jails; and in 277 cases they were committed to Federal institutions. The number of juveniles whose cases were disposed of by each of these three methods was larger in 1936 than in either 1935 or 1934.

[6] These statistics pertain to all Federal offenders under 19 years of age received from courts by United States probation officers for supervision during the year, and to all Federal offenders under 19 years received under sentence in county and city jails, Federal jails, prisons, reformatories, and prison camps.

Data in table J indicate that the juvenile offenders placed under the supervision of United States probation officers were younger than those received under sentence in jails or Federal institutions. There was little change from 1934 to 1936 in the percentage of juveniles in each age group. In each year there were more cases of juveniles of 18 years than of any other age. In 1936 this group constituted 42 percent of the offenders placed under supervision of United States probation officers, 55 percent of those received under sentence in jails, and 68 percent of those committed to Federal institutions.

Table K gives information regarding the offense charged for the three groups of juvenile offenders. In each of the 3 years, 1934, 1935, and 1936, violation of the liquor laws was the most frequent offense for the juveniles placed under the supervision of United States probation officers, although violation of the Immigration Act was more frequent among offenders received under sentence in jails. Among juveniles sentenced to Federal institutions, violation of the Motor Vehicle Theft Act stood first in each year.

SUMMARY

Although the statistics for each of the four sections included in this part of the report have been based upon reports of different groups of juvenile offenders, the analysis of the data for each group has indicated that there was an increase from 1935 to 1936 in the number of juveniles dealt with by Federal authorities. In the largest group of Federal juvenile offenders, those brought to the attention of United States probation officers, the increase from 1935 to 1936 amounted to 8 percent.

It is possible that to some extent this increase is apparent rather than actual, and that to some extent it represents a more complete reporting of cases, as the result of closer administrative supervision. However, it also seems probable that there has been some real increase in the number of juveniles violating Federal laws as, for several years, there has been a general upward trend in the total number of Federal offenders, both adult and juvenile, dealt with by the courts.
